THE ROPES OF MAUL An Ancient Legend of the Sun From the South Seas.

One of the most picturesque legends connected with the solar beams is that told in the islands of the south Pacific, where sunbeams are known as "the ropes of Maui." It is related that in former times the sun god Ra was not so regular in his habits as he is today. In fact, he caused the south sea islanders much annoyance by setting in the They are to be melted slowly, in an morning or at noon or at other inop- iron vessel, putting in the rosin ten portune times, just when his light was minutes or so before the beeswax and needed for the daily tasks of mankind. tallow. Then the sun god confessed himself vanquished and in fear of his life promised Maui that he would in future adjust his daily journeys more in accordance with the comfort and convenience of mortal men.

Ra was then allowed to proceed on his way, but Maul prudently declined to take off the ropes, which may still be seen hanging from the sun at dawn and when he descends into the ocean at night. ECCENTRIC NORTH RIVER.

Curious Pranks of a Tortuous New England Stream. Westerners tell of the queer behavior and changes of course indulged in by the Missouri river, and Texans aver that for pure cussedness and general fickleness no stream of water can approach the Rio Grande. There is, however, a stream in New England where of the rest of the country hears little and which should in justice be accorded a place in the list of queer behaving bodies of water.

This is the North river in Massachusetts. It has its source in a pond near Hanson, whence it proceeds in a tortuous course to the sea at Scituate. Now, the distance by air line from Hanson to Scituate is only ten miles, but by the North river it is forty. New Englanders aver that when the tide is coming in the North river runs upstream, and not only that, but the upper part of it, which is fresh water, also runs up. Thus this queer stream presents the strange spectacle of fresh water river proceeding uphill, The North river's claim to eccentricity is not, however, limited to this fact. It is so crooked that it doubles on itself.

At one spot near Hanover this river, by accomplishing three loops, moves toward the sea for a distance of only fifty feet and wanders about for a distance of about fifteen miles in doing it. In November, 1898, the North river got very cantankerous. It moved its mouth three miles to the northward, thus making a present to the town of Marshfield of a deep harbor. In so doing it killed three men and converted many thousand acres of good meadow land into a salt marsh. Historically the North river is of note as being the scene of the last Indian raid on the coast settlements.-Philadelphia Record.

The Stationer.

"Stationery" has etymologically as much to do with standing as has "stationary." The original stationers, or stationarii, were so called because they sold their books upon stalls or "stations"-in London round about old St, Paul's cathedral, in some cases against the walls of the cathedral itself. This is one of the many trades the names of which have no direct allusion to the commodities sold. "Grocers," for instance, were so called either because they sold "en gros," wholesale, or because they were "engrossers," monopolizers.-London Chronicle.

Always.

Time haunted her. She laughed at him, she resorted to a thousand devices whereby to discomfort him, but he was not to be shaken off. At length she lost her temper. "Can't you see," she flared out reluctantly, "that there's no room for you where beauty dwells?" "There is always," Time rejoined, touching his scythe significantly, "room for one mower."-Boston Herald. One of the hardest jobs I know of is to take a ride, when you're feeling nice and sociable, in a left hand drive machine with a fellow who is deaf in the right ear and has to stop the car and turn his head toward you every time

From Dr. White. University of Georgia, Athens, Ga. May 28, 1913. This "syrup" (Bludwine) has much the composition of grape juice, except that it contains considerably more sugar. It should be a harmiess and wholesome drink, as palatable as grape juice and rather more nutritious because of the larger content of sugar. H. C WHITE, Sc. D., D. D. L, LL. D. Professor of Chemistry, Univ. of Georgia.

Letter from Dr. J. C. Johnson.

U. S. Physician at Macon, Ga. "The proprietors of "Bludwine" have submitted to me for examination the formula comprising every ingradient which it contains After a careful consideration, I find it to be a health'ul, nutritious drink, and cordially recommend it for the table as well as for general use. It is a predigested food tonic as well as a luxative. I further recommend it as a mild, nutritious, refreshing drink for those who are convalescing, as well as for the sick in proper quantities: J. C. JOHNSON, M. D. Macon, Ga.

Expense Not Great. Every farmer should keep a tool shed where he can keep all tools and machines while they are not in use. An expensive shed is not necessary, the principal point being to have some shelter that will keep the implements dry.

Having finished using a machine for the season, put it under the shed and clean the dirt and rust from every part. Then apply a coat of paint. A good paint for all farm implements can be made with red lead and linseed oil. Painting machinery is one of the best methods of prolonging its the period of usefulness.
